New study options at Federation University

Next year Federation University are broadening their study options with their business degrees whereby students can design and customise their degree with a double major. For example, combining Information Technology with Accounting or Marketing.

In addition, students have the opportunity for 'work integrated learning', where you can gain professional experience during your studies. This helps to build your business knowledge and skills enhancing your employability as a graduate. Many universities have programs to help their students to become career ready, an important aspect when choosing the university and course that is right for you. To learn more about Fed Uni's options for next year, you can call 1800 FED UNI (1800 333 864).

Industry Focus

Interior Designer & Interior Decorator

The employment projection in Australia for Interior Designers is due to rise by 16.3% within the next five years*. Interior Designers design and supervise the construction or redevelopment of building interiors and their tasks usually include:

- Speaking to clients and architects to determine clients' needs and intentions, and to ensure safety requirements are met
- They develop designs that are appropriate, functional and aesthetically pleasing
- Prepare working drawings and specifications for interior construction, materials, finishes, space planning, lighting, furnishings and equipment
- Estimate of costs of materials, labour and time, and give estimates for clients for approval
- Organise supplies and prepare detailed instructions for tradespeople
- Oversee and inspect the work of suppliers and tradespeople, and maintain time, cost and quality controls
- Work with specialists in technical areas concerned with fire, hydraulics, mechanical, electrical and structural design, ensuring industry regulations are met
- Prepare and administer tenders and contract documents
- Re-design the interiors of old buildings and design furnishings to be made by cabinetmakers, antique furniture restorers and other tradespeople
- Design exhibitions, commercial display stands or stage, film and television production sets.

If you are creative and have a passion for design, are good at problem-solving and lateral thinking, able to work autonomously or part of a team, a good communicator and have an aptitude for technical drawing and illustration, then this career is one to look at. Interior Designers can work individually or as consultants within a design group and client visitations in their homes or in offices are common with long working hours often at night and on weekends.

To consider Interior Design as a career pathway, it is helpful to have an interest and understanding of building and construction, lighting, colour and furniture. It is worthwhile considering completing your VCE/VET qualification in Interior Design or Interior Design and Decoration prior to further study. You can gain employment with this qualification, however entry into this occupation may be improved if you have a degree in Applied Design, Interior Design, Interior Architecture or Spatial Design. To gain admission into these degree's, a VCE is usually required with pre-requisite subjects being English and Mathematics and a minimum ATAR. Some courses also require a minimum study score in Art, Product Design and Technology, Media, Interactive Digital Media C, Creative and Digital Media, Studio Arts, Systems Engineering or Visual Communication Design. It is important to check entry requirements and detailed course information with each learning institution, as criteria can change and some courses require attendance of an interview and submission of folio of design work. Please see table 1.0 for a list of courses and degree's available in Victoria.

If you are more interested in designing themes and interior decoration schemes (without the building and construction aspect), an alternative to look at is working as an Interior Decorator. This involves planning and implementing for homes, offices, shops, hotels and venues and includes tasks such as; advising clients on the selection of colour schemes, layout, lighting, furniture, floor coverings, curtains, paint, wallpaper and fixtures. You would visit clients' premises and take measurements, provide sketch drawings, specifications and cost estimates for client approval, supervising and coordinating installations and furniture arrangements and undertaking direct selling if working in a retail environment. Education and training for Interior Decorators does not require formal qualifications, but you may like to consider a VET qualification in Interior Decoration or Interior Decoration & Design as competition for employment is very strong. Similar to Interior Design, these VET courses may require attendance of an interview and folio of design work and you will need to contact your chosen institution for further information.

A peak industry body for professional design is the Design Institute of Australia. The DIA brings together design practitioners with people and organisations who employ, commission, support and promote designers. Their aim is to help Australia's professional designers to succeed in business and to enjoy their working lives. You can visit www.design.org.au to research more on the industry and joining as a member may assist you with meeting and networking with other local designers and design educators.
